

Exhibit 1

SB 252 bail reform could save counties & communities millions

Analysis by Open Justice Oklahoma Director
Ryan Gentzler / rgentzler@okpolicy.org

Oklahoma's money bail system drains millions of dollars of wealth from our most vulnerable communities and keeps thousands of our citizens incarcerated each year because they can't afford to bond out. People accused of nonviolent offenses can spend weeks in jail, costing counties millions of dollars with no benefit to public safety.

Money bail amounts vary greatly from county to county.

The median bond amount for people accused of nonviolent misdemeanors varies from a low of $800 in Ellis County to a high of $2,500 in Canadian County. The median bond amount for people accused of nonviolent felonies ranged from a low of $4,000 in Tulsa County to as high as $10,000 or more.

Defendants who cannot post bond spend weeks or months in jail even though they haven't been convicted of a crime.

People accused of nonviolent misdemeanor offenses spend 2 to 6 weeks in jail before their case is resolved if they cannot afford their bond. In some counties, the average person accused of a nonviolent felony spends nearly six months in jail.

Money bail drains wealth from our most vulnerable communities.

Bail bond agents typically charge a nonrefundable fee of 10 percent to secure a person's bond. These fees take millions of dollars from Oklahomans accused of crimes each year, even if their charges are dismissed or they are found not guilty.

SB 252 bail reform

Many defendants can't afford to bond out.

One in four nonviolent misdemeanor defendants in Pushmataha and Logan Counties remains in jail until their case is disposed. One in three people accused of nonviolent felonies in Canadian and Payne counties, and two in five defendants in Tulsa County, remain in jail until the disposition of their cases.

In nearly all counties, a significant portion of people accused of nonviolent offenses fail to post bond

Counties could substantially reduce jail costs through smart pretrial reforms.

SB 252 would ensure that people who are accused of nonviolent offenses and are not a flight risk would be granted recognizance bonds. Many counties could realize savings of several hundred thousand dollars per year by releasing these defendants in a timely fashion without monetary conditions.
